1. A lecturer recommends the same resource on two courses: UG101 and DL101. UG101 is a face-to-face undergraduate course, where as DL101 is only offered via distance learning. He adds both to his course pages in Blackboard.

2. The library has managed to secure electronic access to resource for DL101 under a special arrangement due to the nature of the course. Cost does not permit this access to be extended to all undergraduates.

4. When a UG101 student clicks, the RM cannot permit access to the full text and instead directs the user to the next option - the library catalogue page.

3. When a DL101 student clicks, the RM matches the DL access group rights with stored information, and directs the user through to the electronic resource.
